

18. TRAINING FOR NHS STAFF

This course provides a rare opportunity for medical students to discuss, explore and try some practical tasks to see the difference between long-term illness and disability.

WHO IS THIS COURSE FOR?

This course is for under-graduate or post graduate medical students to understand the difference between the social approach and the medical approach of disability.

WHY ATTEND THIS COURSE?

The course can be presented as a stand-alone module or part of an on-going training programme within an undergraduate or post graduate medical course usually held within a hospital setting.

The main reason for attending this course is that it can provide an insight into life with a disability and how this differs from a long-term illness.

WHAT DOES THE COURSE COVER?

- Icebreaker – Who are we?
- Who we really are
- Task – About you
- Task – Personal you vs Professional you
- Task – First impressions
- Discussion – ‘People look but rarely see!’
- The 4 broad areas of disability
- Illness, disease or disability
- ‘People are all different – illness, disease and disability are all different too’
- So what are the facts!
- Life after diagnosis – how do you cope?
- Case studies
- Any questions

HOW LONG IS THE COURSE? HOW MUCH WILL IT COST?

Both the course length and the cost will vary. We can design and deliver a course to the specific requirements of the company or your customers. We offer a free of charge consultation meeting to discuss course options and the length of the course.

TRAINING METHODS AND TECHNIQUES

We offer a wide range of interactive and engaging training techniques. As we all learn differently, each course has a visual, auditory (listening), kinaesthetic (movement) and retrospective, (looking back – reflective) element to appeal to every learner. We adapt according to the diverse needs and abilities of the individual or group.

We also offer extensive public speaking and interviewing experience to offer each training programme.

Please note: All our courses are currently unaccredited. However we can design accredited courses based on specific outcomes as long as your organisation or company has the relevant accreditation for the course.
